

ABSTRACT

A method of testing for color consistency between corresponding portions of two-dimensional images or photographs that are used to create three-dimensional models of scenes or objects. The testing method makes use of histograms in order to determine whether color consistency exists. In the event that color consistency does exist, voxels or other modeling primitives that are viewed in the portions of the images tested are included in the three-dimensional model.